Objectives	This course aims to provide students with a foundational knowledge of social transformation of China since the early 20th Century. Students will learn about how major social relations –relations between China and the world, between the countryside and the city, between men and women, between intellectuals and peasants, etc.--have been reconstructed in each import period of modern China. They will learn to evaluate social transformation from the perspectives of rural and urban livelihoods. In the process, they will gain critical understanding of “national conditions” that both enables and constrains China’s development in the global context.
Intended Learning Outcomes (Note 1)	Upon completion of the subject, students will be able to: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> (a) have an enhanced foundational knowledge about Chinese social and political transformation. (b) critically evaluate national conditions of China’s transformation. (c) connect China’s transformation with the changing global context. (d) have an experience in organizing and writing a coherent book report or essay in Chinese.

Teaching/Learning Methodology (Note 3)	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Context Creation: The instructor will use a variety of teaching materials (short films, song lyrics, ethnographies, and social science works) to create historical-social context for learning.

2. Problem Posing and Problem Solving: Once students are placed in a specific historical-social context, they will be encouraged to pose their own questions and propose solutions. The instructor and students will then examine how questions and solutions have been actually posed and played out in history and why. This has been used before and proves to be an effective way to animate students' interest.
3. Students will be required to engage in class discussion. The instructor will encourage students to have sociological and ethnographic imagination when discussing issues embedded in different contexts.
4. As part of the reading requirements for subjects with a "CR" designation, students are required to read the assigned book in addition to other readings covered in lectures. They are required to participate in instructional and assessment activities organized by CLC to acquire the appropriate reading skills and to demonstrate their understanding of the extensive text.
5. As part of the writing requirements for subjects with a "CW" designation, students are required to write a review essay of 2,000 – 3,000 words in Chinese on no less than two pieces of reading materials chosen from a list provided by the instructor. They are also required to attend the tutorials organized by CLC to acquire the appropriate writing skills.
